Vienna, December 1. We have already given you account of the taking of Zytchin, a place of importance to the Chriſtians for that it will ſerve very much to ſecure their Winters-quarters, whereof we have ſince received the following particulars. The King of Poland after he had taken his leave of the Duke of Lorrain, underſtanding the Turks had a conſiderable Gariſon in Zytchin, which might very much diſturb the communication between his Troops and the Imperialiſts; called a Council of War, and propoſed to them whether they ſhould endeavor to poſſeſs themſelves of that place or not; moſt of the Council were againſt it, for that the Troops through the great duties they had been upon, were become unfit for preſent ſervice, however the King reſolved not to leave the place in his Enemies hands, and ſent the Prince his Son and the Palatine of Lublin, on the 8th of November, with a ſmall body of Horſe to obſerve the ſituation of it, and upon their return gave orders for the putting what he had reſolved in execution. The Turks on their ſide were in a poſture of defence, and being informed that the King had ordered the Coſſacks to attack their Suburbs on the 10th, they ſet fire to them the night before, which the Coſſacks perceiving immediately fell upon the Enemy, and poſſeſſed themſelves of one of their Gates and broke down the Paliſſadoes, which ſecured the Town. The Turks defended themſelves with great Reſolution, and after a ſharp Diſpute, forced the Coſſacks again to retire, but they being aſſiſted with ſome freſh Troops, renewed their attack, and oblig'd the Turks to quit the Town, and to ſhelter themſelves in the Caſtle, the Action ceaſing with the coming in of the day; The King, not to looſe time, commanded an Aſſault to be immediately made upon the Caſtle, which the Turks underſtanding, and thinking themſelves unable to defend it, they hung out a White Flag, and the Commander in Chief, with two others, came out, and prayed the King to permit them to march to Buda, which his Majeſty granted; and accordingly they marched out, being 800 Foot and 500 Horſe, and were conducted on their way to Buda; In the place was found 20 Pieces of Cannon, beſides ſeveral ſmall Field-pieces and Mortars, and a great quantity of Powder, with good ſtore of Proviſions.
